

body, and peremptorily forbid my entering into church—*I said, you have no Right of Admission; Denial; it is your Duty to assist me in the Discharge of my Function, not to prevent it; you are required to do, in the Body of the Induction; you are required to do, by your Oath of Office; the Minister Governor signs an Induction, your Disposal of the Poll ceases. I hold my Church by the same Authority, as you do your License, both being held by Patent from the Lord Proprietor. An Attempt was made to secure the Doors, but I intended to be too quick for an old Gentleman, who clubbed his Whip. I proceeded in the Service, and, into the Litany, though they drove out all congregation, Six Persons only excepted: A Clerk entered, with a Crowd at his Heels—*Come, is Minute, said he, or I'll pull you out. He did, but finding me better prepared for his Reception, he expected, he returned, after a hearty Curse, saying he came in—Happy I am, that he did not put under the disagreeable Alternative of sacrificing him, permitting myself to be dragged out of the Church, and thrown amongst an enraged Mob, who, at that instant, would very probably have torn me to Pieces, they could not give any Reason for their Violence, and could have repented of the Act, as soon as they perpetrated it. Poor Satisfaction to me! That Villain served his Fate, had he met with it: Few Men in Circumstances would have restrained themselves, as I did, I left him to the Laws of his Country. Investigation, upon my quitting the Church, and a stone, stone him, stone him, was not from a Christian, but a Jew; and, from the Principles upon which our Forefathers crucified our Blessed Saviour, and the Apostles.

The Story raised, to draw the Dutch into the Quarrel, is artful enough; they reported, that I should either make them say what they please, or that I would tell their Steeple with that of the Church—*I told them the Dutch, as excellent Members of a Commonwealth; frugal, laborious, and honest; warm in attachments, and steady in their Friendships; and, from desiring to make their Steeple lower, I would contribute as largely as any Man, to raise it higher, they wished it—The Dutch, with whom I converse in testify, that I always express'd myself very kind towards them, and had employed a Master of the Dutch language, in which I intended sometimes to have preached. It was insinuated, that I kept Two Dutch besides: This Story had its Weight; the Truth I gave up Two Parishes. It would be hard indeed to be deprived of all.*

The Character industriously propagated of me, by malignant and unforgiving Enemies, is some excuse for the Treatment I received from the deluded populace. They were made to expect rather a Minister, than a Man. Is this Mr. Allen? Said some Perfected in the Presence of the Gentlemen that accompanied me—He is free, familiar, and agreeable. He was told, that he was the proudest, and haughtiest Man alive; and withal, a Man of no Character. Another Report, calculated to irritate the People, was, that I wished the Death of Mr. Bacon. This had been informed of, before his Decease; which gave occasion to the following Letter, and which, I am told, did not read without Tears, and pray'd for Strength to return me a suitable Answer.

My dear SIR,

Nothing that the Malice of Man can invent, could affront me, it would be what has been said to me this Night. I am informed, that you have heard, that I, and my Sister, wish'd your Death—*I am, the Story has made me uneasy, from the Unpleasantness, I am told, it occasioned you. He was not my friend that carried you that Report, supposing it would lead your Friend. Why should I wish your Death? My Income is equal to my Desires, and superior to my wants. Why should my Sister wish your Death? She never wished the Death of an Insect, except it was troublesome to her. Even had we wished your Death, we should have had Prudence enough, not to have expressed such Wishes. The Folly of such Conduct, would be as great as the Inhumanity; and yet not take us for Fools. If our united Wishes could do any Thing, it would be, that you should live as long as possible; and, if my disclaiming any Prospect of Success, would preserve your Life, but a single Day, to abate the Violence of your Fever, but a single Hour, would readily do it. I thought of writing to you, upon a Surmise, that you took to yourself some Reflection in the Gazette: Tho' I do not take upon myself Authorship of the Productions there, yet I believe, as my Knowledge extends, that you never were treated at, intended, or thought of. I look upon you a Man of too much Honour, to take away an innocent Person's Reputation, from Repentment, Pique, or private Views. I have always loved your Character, that Milkiness of Blood, (as Dryden expresses it) and softness of Heart, for which you are remarkable; and affected you as a Man of Letters, a Friend of the Proprietary; and a Benefactor to the Public: I can be a displeasing Reflection, that you have a monument to leave behind you, which will transmit your Name, with Credit, to After-Ages; and which, if there be any Gratitude in Mankind, redound to the Advantage of your Family—My Lord often mentions you, and always with Kindness, and has a small Present, which he desires your Acceptance of—My Sister joins with me, in sincere Wishes, the Recovery of your Health, and in Compliments to Mrs. Bacon; and may that great Being, in whose Hands alone, is the Power of Life and Death, make the Psalmist express himself, your Bed in your nest.*

I am, dear SIR,
your affectionate Friend,
and obedient humble Servant,
BENNET ALLEN.
